戦死した人々のために

平和の鐘を鳴らし

自らの命を捧げよ

高嶺の花

It is a Japanese proverb, pronounced

which means literally

'A flower on lofty heights'

but proverbially 'Something which though very tempting, is after all, beyond one's reach'

Defeat into Victory

The 'One Moorti', which depicts a soldier of the Assam Rifles rescuing a refugee family fleeing from Burma ahead of the advancing Japanese, is much more than just another silver relic of the World War II. In many ways it symbolises the very core of the Force which has time and again risen to the occasion, especially in times of trouble. The original silver trophy, presented to the Force by those who escaped certain death from diarrhoea, dysentery, dehydration, malnutrition, malaria, leeches and Japanese snipers at every step, belongs to 2 AR. Surviving members of the Indian National Army, Thongkhong M. Hackip and Lieutenant Ringshi Keishing turn the clock back. While Hackip, a Kuki, went across to the Japanese lines out of sympathy, Keishing, a Tangkhul Naga, was taken prisoner. Both of them claim to have been recaptured by the Assam Rifles 'Victor Force' subsequently. Hackip was also present at Shangshak, now the battalion HQ of 23 AR.

Only 20-odd km from Ukhrul, Shangshak had been the scene of a fierce battle between 4/5 Mahratta (then a part of 50 Independent Para Brigade) and the 15th Division of the Japanese Imperial Army between 20 and 26 March 1944.
